The Place

Ytterjärna, an anthroposophical educational campus by the Swedish fjord, 50 km south of Stockholm.

HISTORY...

Founded in 1964, Ytterjärna Campus (Kulturcentrum Järna), was the idea of the anthroposophically inspired swedish artist Arne Klingborg.

His inspiration grew into a large educational center, and the architect Erik Asmussen was commissioned to draw the houses you can see today in the area around Kulturhuset. The buildings contain everything from hotels, shops, restaurants to homes, offices, gym and music rooms. Each house is a work of art in itself.

The buildings are framed by landscaped gardens and the frozen fjord, flow form fountains and water ponds. Through organic forms, natural materials, light and colors, unique environments have been created to give space to human development.
